NEW QUESTION: 2
What is Nagle's algorithm used for?
A. To increase the latency

B. To resolve issues caused by poorly implemented TCP flow control.
C. To calculate the best path in distance vector routing protocols
D. To calculate the best path in link state routing protocols
Answer: B
Explanation:

Explanation:
Silly window syndrome is a problem in computer networking caused by poorly implemented TCP flow control. A serious problem can arise in the sliding window operation when the sending application program creates data slowly, the receiving application program consumes data slowly, or both. If a server with this problem is unable to process all incoming data, it requests that its clients reduce the amount of data they send at a time (the window setting on a TCP packet). If the server continues to be unable to process all incoming data, the window becomes smaller and smaller, sometimes to the point that the data transmitted is smaller than the packet header, making data transmission extremely inefficient. The name of this problem is due to the window size shrinking to a "silly" value. When there is no synchronization between the sender and receiver regarding capacity of the flow of data or the size of the packet, the window syndrome problem is created. When the silly window syndrome is created by the sender, Nagle's algorithm is used. Nagle's solution requires that the sender sends the first segment even if it is a small one, then that it waits until an ACK is received or a maximum sized segment (MSS) is accumulated.

NEW QUESTION: 3
Acceptable levels of information security risk should be determined by:
A. security management.
B. external auditors.
C. legal counsel.
D. die steering committee.
Answer: D
Explanation:
Explanation/Reference:
Explanation:
Senior management, represented in the steering committee, has ultimate responsibility for determining what levels of risk the organization is willing to assume. Legal counsel, the external auditors and security management are not in a position to make such a decision.
